

As academics, artists, advocates, policy-makers, and concerned persons from different parts of the world, AAPF emphatically oppose the attacks being waged on educational curricula in the United States and elsewhere against intersectionality, critical race theory, Black feminism, queer theory, and other frameworks that address structural inequality. AAPF join the thousands of signatories who have opposed censoring critical content in public and higher education. They also agree with the 30 Black LGBTQ organizations that have denounced the "relentless attacks that have led to book banning, curriculum censorship, politically motivated purges of educators, and an exodus of skilled teachers."

Catering to their noble intentions, the Diversity institute is collaborating with the LCPAE Office of Doctoral Studies and the Counseling Psychology Doctoral Program, to host a Freedom to Learn Book Giveaway to spread awareness on the issues highlighted.
